
PART 3 OF 4
Being first is overrated.
Be the last mover.
Time, focus and why you are not a lottery ticket.

Most value is in the future

- A great company earns most of its value from profits years from now.
- So the real question isn't "can we grow this year?" It's "will this still matter in 10 years?"

10

The power law

- A few things produce most of the results.
- In venture investing, the best investment often returns more than all the others combined.

What that means for you

- Ten side hustles at half effort rarely add up.
- Find the one thing you can be great at, and go deep.

11

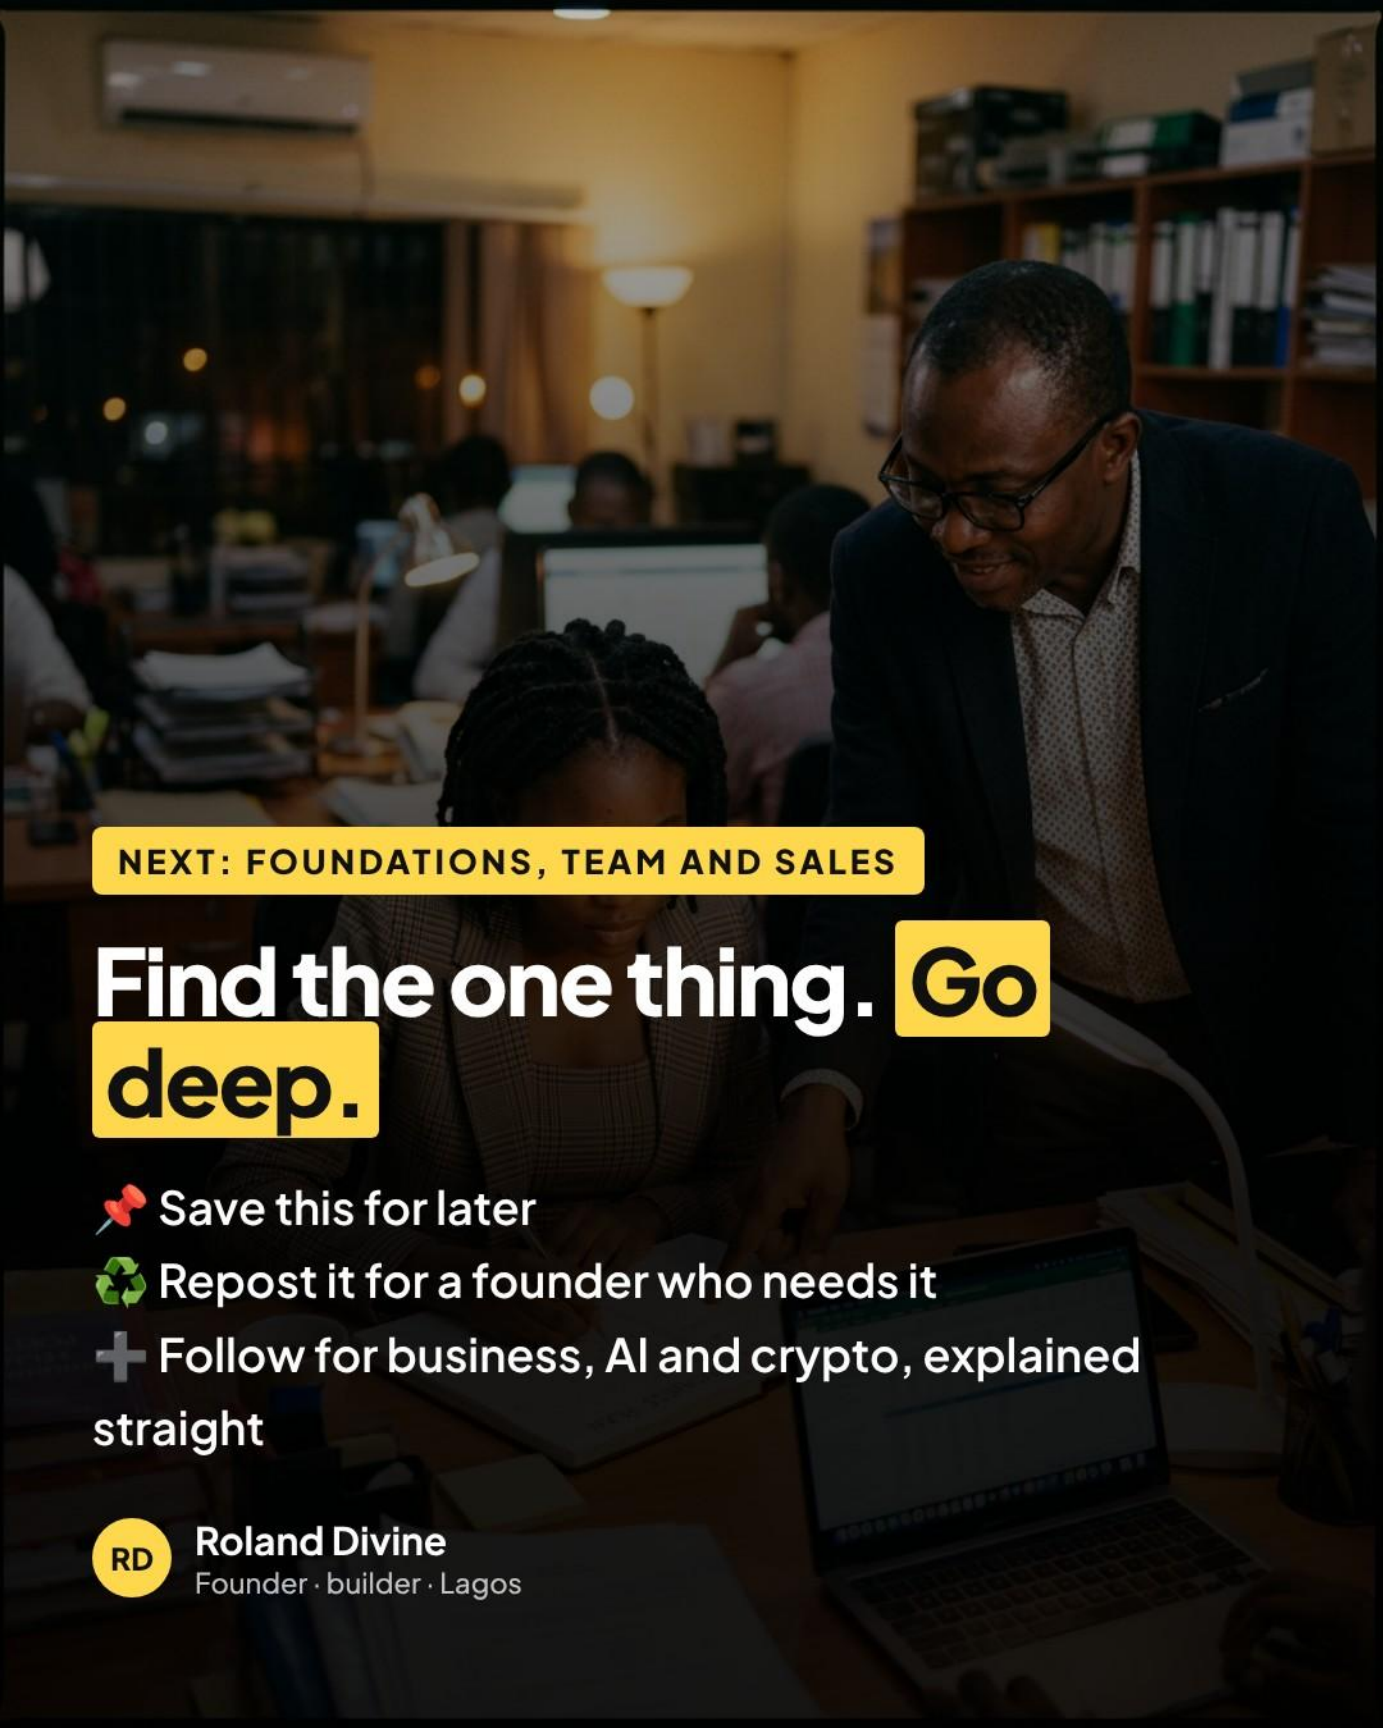

You're not a lottery ticket

- Many people treat success as luck: try lots of small things and hope one hits.
- Thiel argues for a definite plan: decide what you're building and work towards it.

12

A plan beats endless pivoting

- Testing and learning is useful. Tiny tweaks with no direction go nowhere.
- A bold plan, adjusted as you learn, beats wandering.
